Mission

Taiwan Investor Relations Institute (TIRI), a non-profit professional association established for Taiwan-listed, OTC, publicly traded, and startup companies, is dedicated to advancing the practice of investor relations in Taiwan. TIRI is committed to enhancing the professional capabilities and status of its members while fostering alignment with international capital markets.

Vision

Elevate the professionalism of investor relations through lectures and courses. Facilitate industry professionals' networking and connections through banquets and social events. Introduce international best practices to align Taiwan's capital market with global standards. Assist in communication with the investment community and regulatory authorities to promote a virtuous cycle.

Preface

In 1962, the Taiwan Stock Exchange officially opened, however, there has never been a formal investor relations association representing Taiwan's alignment with global capital markets and simultaneously elevating the professionalism and status of IR practitioners. Recognizing this gap, in 2018 a group of capital market enthusiasts jointly established the Taiwan Investor Relations Institute, aiming to improve the current situation.

After seven years of diligent efforts and with the association's dedication, we are honored to have received support from Taiwan's regulatory authorities, listed companies, the capital market, and relevant overseas entities.

In response to the pandemic, innovative online courses for directors, governance executives, and IROs were introduced in 2020.

- ▶ In 2021, to strengthen international alignment in IR practices, we collaborated with National Investor Relations Institute (NIRI) to promote the Investor Relations Charter (IRC®) international certification.
- ▶ In 2022, we hosted the inaugural TIRI Awards for Taiwan-listed companies. The event recognized the best IR companies and individuals, including Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company (TSMC), through votes from hundreds of institutional investors and media outlets.
- ▶ In 2023, For the first time in history, representatives from 6 national IR associations gathered to hold an international forum. We have invited representatives from IR associations in the United States, Italy, Hong Kong, Belgium, Germany, and Singapore to come together and share the latest practices in a forum format!
- ▶ In 2024, the IR power connecting Asia and the world emphasizes cooperation and integration in the global capital markets within the field of investor relations. This year, the IR associations from Singapore and Bulgaria are also invited to Taiwan to promote international IR collaboration and mutual development. We celebrate the diversity brought by different cultures and investment perspectives and look forward to opening a new era of global cooperation in the field of investor relations.
- ▶ In 2025, TIRI advanced IR professionalism and global engagement, strengthening Taiwan's capital market through training, standards development, and international collaboration.

We periodically organize courses and seminars, and closely collaborate with regulatory authorities, academic institutions, and relevant industry organizations to jointly plan and promote related activities.

Looking ahead, we will continue our efforts and anticipate contributing to the professionalism and elevation of investor relations in Taiwan.

Since its establishment in 2018, the Taiwan Investor Relations Institute (TIRI) has completed seven years of steady progress, consistently serving as a key force in advancing the professionalization of investor relations (IR) within Taiwan's capital markets. Beyond promoting IR best practices at the market level, TIRI has remained committed to talent development through forums, director and corporate governance training programs, and the publication of professional insights, ensuring that IR capabilities are continuously cultivated across all levels of the market ecosystem. As part of TIRI's external board performance evaluation services, evaluation panel members conduct in-depth, face-to-face interviews with chairpersons, independent directors, corporate governance officers, and heads of internal audit. These engagements focus on understanding each company's unique challenges while sharing practical insights on corporate governance and ESG best practices. The recommendations provided through this process have received strong recognition and positive feedback from participating companies, contributing to tangible improvements in board effectiveness and governance quality.

Each year, the TIRI Awards recognize companies and Investor Relations Officers (IROs) that demonstrate excellence in IR practices, setting benchmarks for the broader market. This year, participation from institutional investors and media voters reached new highs, resulting in particularly competitive evaluations. Our aspiration is for the TIRI Awards to become the "Oscars" of Taiwan's capital markets. Under a fair and transparent voting mechanism, award recipients consistently represent companies with strong corporate governance performance, active market liquidity, and broad recognition from institutional investors and financial media. In 2025, TIRI introduced the Investor Relations Potential & Progress Award, designed to recognize small- and mid-cap listed companies that meet corporate governance evaluation standards while achieving significant market capitalization growth. Through this recognition, we encourage award recipients to build on their momentum and earn greater confidence and long-term support from the investment community.

This year, TIRI has placed strong emphasis on advancing the TIRIC Professional Certification Program. In June, TIRI Executive Director Jack Chang officially announced the licensing collaboration for the Investor Relations Body of Knowledge, Second Edition at the NIRI Annual Conference in Boston. This milestone establishes a comprehensive and internationally aligned IR training framework for Taiwan, setting the highest professional standards for IR practice in the capital markets. The TIRIC certification system will serve as a strategic talent pipeline for listed companies, cultivating top-tier IR professionals. Earning the TIRIC certification represents the highest level of recognition for corporate spokespersons and IROs in terms of professional competence and market credibility.

TIRI's international engagement has continued to expand beyond hosting overseas IR associations in Taiwan. In 2025, TIRI actively engaged with global exchanges and IR organizations through outbound exchanges and partnership discussions. In April, Secretary General Judy Hsu visited the Tokyo Stock Exchange and the Japan Investor Relations Association, and later in the year was invited to attend the Association's 30th anniversary conference. In June, Executive Director Jack Chang announced the IR Body of Knowledge licensing collaboration at the NIRI Annual Conference in Boston. In September, Chairman Jonny Kuo led a delegation to the ABIRD 20th Anniversary Summit in Bulgaria, attended by representatives from 12 countries, and conducted visits to the Frankfurt Stock Exchange and the German Investor Relations Association (DIRK), as well as Borsa Istanbul and the Turkish Investor Relations Society (TÜYİD). Through sustained collaboration with international IR associations, TIRI continues to connect Taiwan's IR profession with global capital markets.

Visit to JIRA

Since April 2024, TIRI has actively engaged with the Japan Investor Relations Association (JIRA), culminating in a meaningful meeting held during this international conference. Established in 1993, JIRA represents approximately 40% of Japan's listed companies and, with strong support from the Tokyo Stock Exchange, continues to advance professional standards through initiatives such as the Japan IR Awards and dedicated training programs—closely aligned with TIRI's mission.

The exchange also provided TIRI with deeper insights into the structure and governance model of Japan's capital markets. This milestone not only strengthened bilateral ties, but also laid the groundwork for future collaboration and a more visible, unified IR presence across Asia.

- (3) Having the latest certificate related to IR practices and at least 3 years of qualified full-time work experience as an IR professional or IR consultant.

Holder of Investor Relations Charter (IRC®)

Teddy Tsai Markis Capital - Founder/CEO

10 years ago, I founded Markis Capital to bring professional IR consulting to the Taiwan market. I have always not focused on certifications and licenses, but more on the passion and talent of my staff. Taiwan's educational system relies heavily on getting as many licenses as possible. In the financial industry, licensing should be the minimum requirement, but not best practice. I've taken exams in the US, Taiwan, HK, and Singapore, and studied for the CFA. The IRC certification is the closest to an ideal, focusing on domain knowledge and industry best practices. I urge more Taiwanese IR professionals to take the IRC and together help to promote the professionalism of the IR industry in Taiwan.

Tim Gao Global Tek Fabrication Co., Ltd. - CFO

In Taiwan, professionals in the capital market, such as securities investment analysts and investment consultants, are required to possess certain educational backgrounds and pass qualifying examinations in order to practice their respective professions. In the domain of issuing companies, there are also specific educational and experience requirements for accounting managers responsible for preparing financial statements, and they must complete annual continuing education hours as mandated by the regulatory authority. Within the cycle of external disclosure of company information, there are distinct qualifications and professional development requirements for spokespersons that are currently missing.

The regulatory authorities should consider establishing qualification requirements for these roles in the company's information disclosure framework to further strengthen Taiwan's stock market as a platform for long-term international capital and capital gains creation.

Jack M. Chang TURBONEXT AI LTD.

The IRC® provided a playbook that I never had when I first became an Investor Relations Officer (IRO). Initially, I leaned on my experience as a sell-side analyst, by anticipating what information the investor communities were looking for to prepare for meetings with potential investors. However, external communication is only a small piece of the puzzle, as the responsibilities of the IRO is much broader than just external communication. The IR Competency Frame Work, which includes eleven subject areas that the IRC examined is based on, effectively outlines the key foundational knowledge and skillset that even seasoned IROs would find useful. I would strongly encourage current investor relations practitioners, as well as those considering IRO as a potential career, to obtain the IRC®.

Tina Chang Compal Electronics, Inc. -
Senior Director of IR and Brand Office & Deputy Spokesperson

Investor Relations (IR) is a profession that requires accumulated experience and specialized knowledge. In 2020, TIRI introduced the Investor Relations Certification (IRC) from the National Investor Relations Institute (NIRI) in the United States. The IRC Certification exam covers essential knowledge and skills needed for IR work. For newcomers entering the field of IR, participating in the IRC can provide a quick overview of the entire scope of IR work. For seasoned Investor Relations Officers (IROs), I believe that pursuing the IRC certification and exam can help establish a benchmark for best practices, enabling you to make well-informed judgments and recommendations in the face of rapidly changing markets. This adaptability, tailored to specific circumstances, contributes to enhancing corporate value and reducing risks in the capital markets.

Therefore, for those aspiring to have a long-term career in the IR profession, I highly recommend participating in the IRC. You will discover that it goes beyond a professional certification; it significantly benefits your future practical work in the field. Best wishes for becoming the next IRC achiever!
